

Scouting for Food Timeline

Scouting for Food can be adjusted to fit your unit's schedule or to work around the parameters that best fit your program; this is a suggested timeline which will aid your Pack, Troop, or Crew in executing an efficient and successful Scouting for Food campaign.

January is a month of preparation in which your Service or Scouting for Food chair will identify which community food bank you are taking the donations to, inform that food bank and gather their hours of operation, pick up boxes or cases from the food bank to deliver the collections in, and prepare the unit schedule for the campaign. This should only take an hour or two of total work for the Chair to prepare, although they will have several small tasks spread out, so please do not procrastinate!

Following the traditional campaign, during the regular meeting times in the last week of January or the Saturday before the collection day, units canvas their neighborhood to collect donations and leave notices at the homes where no one came to the door. Most units can promote SFF in their neighborhoods over an hour or two the Saturday before the big day, or during their regularly scheduled meeting that week. Some units also have their scouts canvas their own neighborhood and bring their collections to the next Scout meeting. Additional alternative plans for the campaign are addressed in the FAQs.

On Saturday, Feb. 2nd, units will revisit those homes, gather food left at the door, and reconvene to consolidate their donations to be delivered at the foodbank of your choice. Most units are able to gather and deliver their food collection over 2-3 hours on the Saturday morning of the big day.

In the week after the campaign, units will go to www.GrandCanyonBSA.org/food to report the total food poundage collected, participation, and number of patches they would like! This takes minutes.
